Federal Communications Commission:

The answers contained in 7330-7/1700A3 clearly show the secondary status in which the FCC places the R/C hobbyists.

The chart titled CHANNEL SPLITS shows deliberate, planned interference. This is ~~in~~credibly poor engineering. Rare interference won't be a little static, it will result in expensive models running out of control. The only way this makes any logical sense is that the FCC is not truly concerned with the several hundred thousand citizens who are R/C hobbyists, but rather is controlled by small special interest groups.

While the FCC considers R/C hobbyists unlicensed secondary users, I assure you that we are FIRST CLASS TAXPAPERS AND VOTERS and that our representatives will understand our concerns.
